Welcome to your National Forests!

The National Forests are truly America's Great Outdoors! Your 155 National Forests cover an area about the size of California, Oregon, and Washington combined and stretch from Alaska to Puerto Rico. They offer outstanding opportunities for outdoor recreation.

Wherever you are in America, you're probably no more than a day's drive from a National Forest, where you can hike, fish, camp, ski, or just sit back and enjoy the forest surroundings. Over 100,000 miles of trails and 10,000 recreation sites await you nationwide.

Use this guide to discover your National Forests. For more information, contact the National Forest of your choice.

Enjoy your National Forests—they are America's Great Outdoors.

The Forest Service—Caring for the Land and Serving People

The Forest Service enriches the lives of Americans in many ways through management of the National Forests and Grasslands, forestry research, and cooperation with forest managers on State and private lands. The Forest Service is dedicated to multiple-use management for the sustained yield of renewable resources such as water, forage, wildlife, wood, and recreation. Multiple-use means managing resources under the best combination of uses to benefit the American people while ensuring the productivity of the land and protecting the quality of the environment.

Forest Service Research

The Forest Service provides the scientific and technical knowledge necessary to protect the Nation's natural resources on all lands, gain the maximum benefit from their use, and leave the environment unspoiled. Research is conducted through a network of Forest and Range Experiment Stations and the Forest Products Laboratory.

International Forestry

The Forest Service plays a key role in formulating policy and coordinating U.S. support for the protection and sound management of the world's forest resources. It works closely with other U.S. agencies such as the Agency for International Development, the U.S. Department of State, and the Environmental Protection Agency, as well as with nonprofit development organizations, wildlife organizations, universities, and international assistance organizations. The Forest Service's international work has served to link people and communities striving to protect and manage forests throughout the world.

The United States Department of Agriculture (USDA) prohibits discrimination in its programs on the basis of race, color, national origin, sex, religion, age, disability, political beliefs, and marital or familial status. (Not all prohibited bases apply to all programs.) Persons with disabilities who require alternative means for communication of program information (Braille, large print, audiotape, etc.) should contact the USDA Office of Communication at (202) 720-2791.

Here is a place where you can use words like "tallest" and "oldest" without exaggerating. For a start, see the coastal redwood (the tallest) or the bristlecone pine (the oldest) trees on earth. Enjoy a picnic by a cool rushing stream, or discover mountain meadows filled with delicate spring wildflowers. Camp among the pine-encircled granite peaks of the Sierra Nevada Mountains, or climb a sleeping volcano—Mount Shasta. You'll find recreation opportunities for everyone in the National Forests of the Pacific Southwest Region.

Cross-country ski or snow-machine along winter trails. In spring and summer, paddle through the Boundary Waters Canoe Area, and listen for the call of the loon. In the fall, driving among the blazing autumn colors of a hardwood forest should be at the top of your list of things to do. Each season offers special opportunities to enjoy your National Forests of the Eastern Region.

North to Alaska! Evergreen forests blanket rugged snow-capped mountains, rushing streams team with salmon, and icebergs the size of office buildings calve from glaciers into the sea. Camp along historic gold rush trails, watch eagles soar above forests from the comfort of a passenger ship, or kayak the shoreline of a quiet fiord. Your National Forests in Alaska are a special reason to visit America's "Last Frontier."
